AEROSPACE SUPPLY MARKET BRIEF · BRAZIL · EDITION 29 OCT 2026

Aircraft parts demand up 11.1% and avionics prices up 17.2%, while the late-October BRL selloff erased most of the currency cushion

EDITION

DATA TO
PTAX 28 Oct · Comex Sep · PPI Sep

Brazilian imports of aircraft parts reached USD 1,436 million in Jan–Sep 2026, 11.1% above 2025. US avionics producer prices rose 17.2% in twelve months, roughly ten times the pace of aircraft parts (+1.6%) and engines (+1.2%). Until 23 October the BRL was trading 6.3% stronger than a year earlier; on 26 October, the first business day after the presidential runoff, USD PTAX jumped 9.2% in one session and closed 28 October only 0.8% below the October 2025 average.

01 Implications for procurement

1. Avionics: move renewals to index-linked clauses (PPI PCU334511 with a trigger band) instead of fixed annual increases. A 17% step in one year makes fixed-price multi-year offers a supplier-side bet you pay for upfront.
2. FX: the planning assumption of a stronger BRL no longer holds. Revisit Q4 USD and EUR payables with Treasury, and avoid locking 2027 budget rates on one volatile week: use a 30-day average and a sensitivity band.
3. Supply base: the United States still leads but keeps losing share, while Germany and France gain. Qualify second sources there for single-source parts before demand growth tightens capacity.
4. Data check: turbine imports (NCM 8411) fell about 74% in 2026. Confirm classification or reporting changes before using them in forecasts.

03 Watch list for the next edition

TRIGGER · ACTION

FX
USD/BRL holding above 5.39 (Oct 2025 average) for two weeks means the year-on-year FX gain is gone. Action: reprice open BRL budgets for USD items.

PRICES
October PPI for avionics above +15% YoY confirms a structural step, not a one-off. Action: escalate open avionics renewals to index-linked terms.

DEMAND
Comex October data keeping 8807 growth above 10% YTD signals tighter supplier capacity. Action: secure 2027 slots and lead times now.
